Our solid hardwood flooring is produced in our Wiltshire sawmills using English oak, ash and elm sourced from local woodlands, alongside carefully selected French oak.

We control the entire process, from log to finished board. Sawing, drying, grading and machining all happen in-house. That’s how we ensure every board meets our standards before it leaves the yard.

Useful to Know

Specification
Solid hardwood floors are supplied in a traditional mixed-width specification, typically including three board widths in random lengths.

Boards are machined with a reversible tongue and groove on the long edges and square ends, giving you a choice of both faces when laying.

Moisture Content
Before machining, boards are dried slowly in two stages. They are first air dried in the traditional way, then kiln dried using heat generated from our own waste wood. This careful process produces stable, flat boards ready to perform.

We dry the floorboards to a moisture content suitable for laying inside an average British house (10–12%) and then store the boards in a moisture-controlled building.

We still recommend allowing the boards to acclimatise on site for four to six weeks before installation, just in case your house is a little wetter or drier than average.

Coatings
This range is supplied unfinished. Boards will require sanding and coating with your choice of hardwax oil or lacquer.
